Organic products do not contain artificial preservatives, color, or flavors, and in order to make an organic claim, ingredients should be included on the national List of Allowed and Prohibited Substances. Organic products are required to be certified by the government approved certifying agency that meets the USDA National Organic Program (NOP) Standards. Organic food processors follow a defined set of standards to produce organic food products:

- Preserve natural resources and biodiversity
- Only used approved materials
- Do not use genetically modified ingredients
- Receive annual on-site inspections
- Separate organic food products from non-organic food products
